Informal Porch Parties and Parties to Wildwood-People in and Out of Town.

To the woman fond of the gay pleasures of the resorts affected by summer wanderers, and of the social joy's offered by Saturday night "hops," the annual going away says an exchange, a never delight. To the housekeeping unfashionable farmhouse with her brood genuine relief; but the typical stay-at-home who cannot content her soul and a bureau wide by a trunk and a wash-

To such women the uncurtained coolness of the city home, with its modern improvements, offers an ideal stopping place during months, especially so if part of generate stay-at-home wenders about at her own sweet will, with her back hair in a braid, and wears a morning wrapper at luncheon if she wants to without fear of

According to the Philadelphia Press a charming stay-at-home parade has been planned by three clever girls who intend to go to Europe next summer and are economizing this season for that purpose. One of them is a school teacher, one a stenographer and the third a china decorator. These young women all make good salaries and are sensible girls, who have planned to live together in a happy-go-lucky fashion through the city summer like three female

They have taken a big, roomy apartment, with eight large side windows looking out over a vacant lot, which, with its abundant grass and nodding daisles, comes as near being a meadow as any place could within the city limits. So they are assured plenty of light, air and pleasant outlook during the warm days and nights.

The furniture of the little double drawing room is all of bamboo and wicker, one big divan being piled with cushions covered entirely in blue and white slips. There is a plano of white enamel in one corner, and a low table to match for the magazines and summer literature. There are a few plants, but very little bric-a-brac, and only as much furniture as is needed. The windows are uncurtained, but shaded with Venetian blinds, which keep the house cool during the day. The doors are hung with bamboo curtains, and the breeze keeps them tinkling musically all the time. The general effect is that of coolness, cleanlings, and space. ness and space.

The dining room is fitted like the parlor, and in this apartment there is a great bay window, which extends across one entire side of the room. Here these ingenious girls have a sort of conservatory of vines and plants, not shutting out light and air, as in too many cases, but trained close to the walls and spreading over the ceiling. Swung across this sylvan nook is a tasseled hammock of white cord, and upon it a big pillow in a lace-trimmed muslin cover rests invitingly. It is difficult to imagine one of these young women climbing to this airy retreat, but as it swings in the air which comes through the open casement it looks comes through the open casement it looks restful and summery.

One of the attractive objects in this room is a big glass punch bowl, resting on the white embroidered linen doylie on the buffet. Here the mistresses of the establishment propose to brew cooling lemonades on hot summer evenings, with glaciers of ice therein and berries and fruit floating about upon the surface. The chance visitor within this pleasant summer abode will be regaled with draughts of this liquid blessedness.

The breakfasts, dinners and suppers upon which these girls will subsist will be selected for their appropriateness to the season. Fruit will furnish a large part of every meal, and they are to take turns in making out menus each week for the maid to follow. And the best of it all is that the entire summer plan, including everything, is not going to cost them more than $10 a week each, inclusive of everything.

"MASCOT" AND "BILLEE TAYLOR" TO BE PRODUCED THIS WEEK.

Third Week of the Summer Opera Season in Indianapolis-Other Stage News.

The programme at Wildwood this week is more than ordinarily attractive. It includes one very bright opera in "La Mascot," that was about as popular as any of the light comic operas ever sung, and another particularly picturesque opera in "Billee Taylor," which was never given here enough to make the public as familiar with its music as its merits warrant. Both operas will be given with special scenery and new costumes, and on a line up to the general excellence established by the Wildwood company. "Mascot" will be the bill the first half of the week, beginning with to-morrow night.

In this Mr. Temple will have an opportunity to display his comedy talent to an advantage equally as good as he had in "Mikado" as Koko, Lorenzo in "Mascot" remains to-day one of the best laugh provokers of any light opera character ever created. The absurd make-up and stage "business" of the comical fellow who made every light-opera producer since Audran wrote "Mascot." There have been many immitations of Lorenzo, but none has caught the burlesque flavor in just the way that Audran did in this droll character. Lorenzo has a number of "catchy" songs ridiculing popular superstitions, the best re-membered of which is the one beginning "When thirteen sit at table," sung to bright music and assisted with a chorus that is better than anything in "Pinafore." None of the older comic operas has furnished a more popular song than the never-to-be-forgotten "Gobble" duet between Bet-tina and Pippo. In this Miss Walker will be heard at her best. Bettina, you know, had a drove of turkeys to look after, while Pippo was an uncouth sheep herder. Their "gobble" song became a rage wherever the "Mascot" was sung. Its peculiarly descriptive music made it easy to learn, and a few years ago it was one of the most popular whistling airs on the

Harold Blake will be the ambitious Prince Frederick in the cast, and will have several songs well suited to his refined tenor voice that has become a favorite at Wild-wood. Charles Huntington will be the Rocco, a part in which he will find an op-portunity to introduce his talent for funmaking to good advantage. The chorus work in "Mascot" will be one of its most taking features. The opera is not loaded down with a lot of principals to confuse one in following the thread of the story, and in its very simplicity has a charm that is lacking in many productions. The libretto admits of local interpolations, and if a company were so disposed it might be made broadly farcical. The cast will be as

Pippo	Charles Shackford
Rocco	Charles Huntington
Matteo	G. Byron Browne

DeKoven's Monocle.

"It is true that Reginald De Koven is not the most popular man on earth," said a man who is very intimate with the composer the other day to a Chicago Chronicle writer. "But Reggy does not deserve the reputation of being stiff and supercilious, which clings to him wherever he goes. He is only another victim of the deadly monocle. Nobody can wear a single-bareled eyeglass in this land of intelligence and freedom and be hall-fellow-well-met. The American looks upon the monocle as the badge of snobbery and worse. The dramatists who have made the English cad invariably a monoclist, if one may coin a word, are partly responsible for this popular prejudice, and the real English snobs who from time to time infest Broadway and occasionally even penetrate as far as Chicago have strengthened it. Now, De Koven wears an eyeglass because he needs it-a most singular proceeding, of course, but it is the truth. Without that glass glued into his windward eye he could never steer a straight course. But most the people who see De Koven jam that over his optic regard it as affectation, and the outward sign of a haughty aristocratic spirit. The composer is not the only man who is aggering under the weight of a monocle There are two other prominent men in N York who are short on sight and long or unpopularity. One is a clergyman whose name I prefer not to mention, and the other is Van Alen, the man the President tried to send to Rome. I believe Van Alen would have been confirmed by the Senate as minister to Italy had not some touchy Senators felt ag-Notes of the Stage. "Special Delivery" is booked to appear in this city early in the fall. "The Girl I Left Behind Me" is in its fourth week at the Adelphia Theater, Lon-
